Lightning Het Drope What a Funny Namel Very True, but it Kills All Pain. Sold Everywhere, Every Day-Without Rollof, There is No Payl,

Seven years went by before John En-derby saw his son again or set foot in Enderby House. Escaping to Holland on a night when everything was taken from his saye his honor and his daugh-ter, he had lived there with Mistress Felicity, taking service in the army of the county.

Felicity, taking service in the army of the count.

Outlaw as he was, his estates given over to his son, who now carried a knighthood bestowed by King Charles he was still a loyal subject to the dynasty which had dishonored him. When the king was beheaded at Whitehall he mourned and lamented the miserable crime with the best of his country-he mourned and immented the imserable crime with the best of his countrymen.

It was about this time that he journeyed into France, and there he stayed with his daughter two years. Mistress Falkingham, her aunt, was with her, and watched over her as carefully as when she was a child in Enderby house. About this time, Cromwell, urged by solicitous friends of the outlaw, sent word to him to return to England that he might employ him in foreign service, if he did not care to serve in England itself. Cromwell's message was full of agreeable reflections upon his sufferings and upon the injustice that had been done to him by the late king. For his daughter's sake, who had never been entirely happy out of England, Enderby returned, and was received with marked consideration by Cromwell at whitehall. "Your son, sir," said Cromwell, "hath heen a follower of the man of sin. He was of those notorious people who cried out against the work of God's servants when Charles paid the penalty of his treason at Whitehall. Of late I have received news that he is of those sons of Belisi who are intriguing to bring back the second Charles. Two days ago he was bidden to leave Enderby House. If he be found among those who join the Scotch army to dight for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of light of the those who join the Scotch army to fight for the Pretender, he shall bear the penalty of his offense."

"He has been ill advised, your highness," said Enderby,
"He shall be advised better," was the stern reply. "We will have peace, in England, and we will, by the help of the Lord's strong arm, rid this realm of these recalcitrant spirits. For you, sir, you shall return to your estate at Enderby, and we will use you abroad as opportunity shall occur. Your son has taken to himself the title which the man of sin conferred upon you, to your undoing."

undoing."
"Your highness," replied Enderby, "I have but one desire, and that is peace.

HE RODE ROUND INTO THE COURTYARD AND CALLED

I have been outlawed from England so long, and my miscries have been so great, that I accept gladly what the justice of your highness sives thus freely. But I must rell your highness that I was no enemy of King Charles, and am no foe to his memory. The wrong was done by him to me, and not returned by me to him, and the issue is between our Maker and ourselves. But it is the pride of all Englishmen that England be well governed, and strong and important in the eyes of the nations; and all these things has your highness achieved. I will serve my country honorably abroad, or rest peacefully here on my own estate, lifting no hand against your highness, though I hold to the succession in the monarchy." I have been outlawed from England so though I hold to the succession in the monarchy."

Cromwell looked at him steadily and frowning for a minute, then presently, his face clearing, he said:

"Your words, detached from your character, sir, would be traitorous; but as we stand, two gentlemen of England face to face, they seem to me like the words of an honest man, and I love honesty before all other things, Get to your home, sir. You must not budge from it until I send for you. Then, as

From early child hood until I was ECZEMA grown my family spent a fortune trying to cure me of this disease. I visited Hot Springs and was treated by the best medical men, but was not benefited. When men, but was not benefited. When all things had a support of the s proof of your fidelity to the ruler of your country, you shall go on whatever mission I send you."

"Your highness, I will do what seems my duty in the hour of your summons."
"You shall do the will of the Lord," answered the Protector, and, bowing a farewell, turned upon his heel. Enderby looked after him a moment, then turned towards the door, and as he went out to mount his horse he muttered to himself:
"The will of the Lord as ordained by Oliver Cronnwell—humph!"
Then he rode away up through Tracislars aguire and into the Tottenham court road, and so on out into the Shires until he came to Enderby House.

House.

Outside all was as he had left it seven years before, though the hedges were not so well kept and the grass longer before the house. An air of loneliness pervaded all the place. No one met him at the door, He rode round into the courtyard and called.

With the flat of his sword. A man servant came out. From him he learned that four of Cromwell's soldiers were quartered in the house, that all the old servants, save two, were gone, and that two days before his son had been expelled from the place by Cromwell's order. Inside the house there was less change. Boon compan-ions of the boisterous cavaliers as his son had been, the young man's gay hours had been spent more away from Enderby House than in it.

son had been, the young man's gay hours had been spent more away from Enderby House than in it.

When young Enderby was driven from his father's house by Cromwell, he determined to join the Scotch army which was expected soon to welcome Charles the Second from France. There he would be in contact with Lord Rippingdale and his majesty. When Cromwell was driven from his place, street honors might await him. Hearing in London, however, that his father had returned, and was gone on to the estate, he turned his horse about and rode back again, traveling by night chiefly, and reached Enderby House four days after his father's arrival there.

He found his father seated alone at the dinner table. Swinging wide open the door of the dining-room he strode aggressively in.

The old man stood up in his place at the table, and his eyes brightened expectantly when he saw his son, for his brain was quickened by the thought that perhaps, after all his wrong-doing, the boy had come back to stand by him, a repeniant prodigal. He was a man of warm and firm splirt, and now his breast heaved with his emotions. This boy had been the apple of his eye. Since the day of his birth he had looked for great things from him, and had seen in him the refined perpetuation of the sturdy race of the Enderby's He counted himself but a rough sort of country gentleman, and the refined face of his son had suggested the country gentleman, and the refined face of his son had suggested the country gentleman cast in a finer mould. He was about to speak kindly as of old, but the young man, with clattering spurs, came up to the other end of the table, and with a dry insolence he said:

"By whose invitation do you come

By whose invitation do you come

The blood fied from the old man's heart. For a moent he felt sick, and his face turned white. He dropped his head a little and looked at his son steadily and mournfully.

"Shall a man need an invitation to his own house, my son?" he said at last. The arrogant lips of the young man tightened; he tossed up his head, "The house is mine. I am the master hers. You are an outlaw!"

"An outlaw no longer," said the old man, "for the Protector has granted me again the home of which I was cruelly dispossessed."

again the home of which I was cruelly dispossessed."

"The Protector is a rebel!" answered the young man, and his knuckles raped petuliantly upon the table. "I stand for the king—for King Charles the Second. When you were dispossessed his late martyred majesty made me master of this estate, and a knight also."

The old man's hands clinched in the effort to rule himself to quictness.
"You are welcome to the knighthood which I have never accepted," said he; "but for these estates—" All at once a fierce anger possessed him, and the great shoulders beaved up and down with emotion—"but for these estates, sir, nolaw nor king can take them from me, I am John Enderby, the first son of a fist son, the owner of these estates since the time my mother gave me birth. You, sir, are the first of our name that ever was a traitor to his house!"

So intent were the two that they did not see or hear three men who drew aside the curtains at the end of the room and stood spying upon them—three of Cromwell's men. Young Enderby laughed snesringly and answered:

derby laughed sneerinsty and answered:

"It was a king of England that gave Enderby Manor to the Enderby's. The king is the source of all entate and honor, and I am loyal to the king. He is a traitor who spurns the king's honor and defice it. He is a traitor who links his foutunes with that vile, murderous upstart, that blethering hypocrite, Oliver Cromwell! I go to Scotland to join King Charles, and before three months are over his majesty will have come into his own again, and I into my own here at Enderby!"

The old man trembled with the flerceness of his emotions.

"I only am master here," he said, "and I should have died upon this threshold ere my Lord Rippingdale and the king's men had ever crossed it, but for you, an Enderby, who deserted me in the conflict; a coward who went over to the enemies of our house."

The young man's face twitched with a mallgnant anger. He suddenly started forward, and with a side-long blow struck his father with the flat of his sword. A red ridge of bruised flesh instantly rose upon the old man's cheek and ear. He caught the arm of the chair by which he stood, staggering back as though he hod received a mortal wound.

"No. no, no!" he said, his voice gulping with misery and horver. "No, no!

He said no more, for upon the instant, four men entered the room. They were of Cromwell's ironsides. Young Enderby looked round swiftly, ready to fight, but he saw at once that he was trapped. The old man also laid his hand upon his

FORTY THOUSAND.

That's the Number of Physicians Who Use the New

PREPARATION FOR DYSPEPSIA

And Wasting Diseases-They Do So Because It is Not a Secret Patent Modleine-And ause They Know It Cures livery Form of Indigetion and Stomach

It had been recently stated that not less than 40,000 physicians are using or indorsing the new discovery for indigestion sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspesia Tableta. Dr. Tomilnson gives the following reasons why physicians regard this new remedy with so much favor.

First, because it is not a secret patent medicine, but a scientific combination of vegetable essences, pure asseptic pepsin, free from animal impurities and of very high digestive power, hismuth and solden seal.

It has been tested repeatedly and the experiments have proven that one grain of the digestive principles in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest three thousand times its own weight of lean meat, eggs, oatmeal and similar wholesome foods.

The fablets act wholly upon the food thousand times its own weight of real ment, eggs, oatmeal and similar wholesome foods.

The tablets act wholly upon the food taken into the stomach, digesting it thoroughly no matter whether the stomach is in good working order or not, and cure all forms of dyspenia and stomach troubles on the common sense plan that they nourish the body and rest the atomach at the same time. Stuart's Dyspenia Tablets do not act upon the bowels like the old-fashioned after dinner pills; nor are they an artificial stimulant like "stomach bitters, for are they in any way similar to so called pre-digested foods, which consist of 55 per cent of "glucose," the stuff that cheap candles are made from, but Stuart's Dyspenia Tablets do what none of these do, they act wholly upon the food eaten and digest the completely and the cure of indigestion is an assured fact, because the food being promptly digested, it cannot lie for hours in the stomach, fermenting, decaying, dilling the system with the germa of disease, but is assimilated, nourishing and invigorating not only the body and brain, but the stomach itself, as well.

The tablets are absolutely harmless and brain, but the stomach itself, as well.

The tablets are absolutely harmless and can be given and are given with benefit to little oblidien and infants suffering from indigestion, as shown above they contain no mineral poisons, nor anything in any way injurious.

Dr. Wuerth says he has noticed in many cases that the tablets not only cured the indigestion, but that a very noticeable increase of flesh resulted where people who used the tablets were thin and run down in flesh before taking them, and it is not at all surprising that such should be the case when it is remembered that most people are thin because their stomachs are out of order, and when perfect digestion is brought back an increase of flesh is the natural accompaniment.

brought back an increase or fiesh is the natural accompaniment.

Within the last six months many thousand cases of stomach trouble and dyspepsia have been cured by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and their convenience and popularity is such that drugsists everywhere are now selling them. The price is 50 cents per package and if your druggist has not yet ordered them he will get them for you from his wholesaler; they are manufactured by Stuart Company, Marshall, Mich. Your druggist if he is honest, will tell you that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the only preparation now before the public recommended and designed solely for the cure of indigestion and stomach troubles, no other claims are made for it, it is not claimed to be a cure-all.
